Let's Start!

What do you need to know about job interviews?

Learning Outcome

Identify and describe issues relating to money, in written and spoken situations according to work and social contexts.

Can Do Statements

- I can exchange complex information about work.
- I can deal with communication breakdowns.
- I can talk about facts and courses of action.

Ask your partner:

- What advice would you give someone before a job interview?
- What works best? Why?

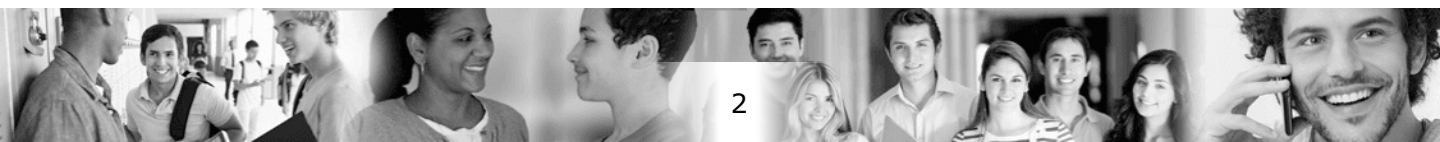

Let's Explore!

Adam gets ideas from Kristi!

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Kristi: Are you still at the fair?
- Adam: Yes. There are a few booths I've not visited yet.
- Kristi: Okay. I have a few guidelines that will help you land a job.
- Adam: Go for it.
- Kristi: Stand up while you're waiting.
- Adam: Could you expand on that?
- Kristi: People are often asked to take a seat while they wait. Don't do it. What you want is to impress them and look more confident. You can only do this if you are on their level when you meet them.
- Adam: Ok. That's sound advice. What more?
- Kristi: Don't speak too fast.
- Adam: Could you elaborate on that?
- Kristi: You want to be intelligible. What you can do to avoid this is to breath slowly through your nose. This will help you lower your heart rate.
- Adam: Breathing is important. Got it.
- Kristi: Be comfortable when you sit.
- Adam: Uh, could you shed some light on this?
- Kristi: What I'm suggesting is to find a sitting position that suits you. What I usually do is sit straight and maybe lean forward a bit. You'll look more professional that way.
- Adam: Sitting is important, then.
- Kristi: Make sure you are eagerly listening.
- Adam: I am not a good listener. Could you be more specific?
- Kristi: When we're trembling with fear, we tend to become bad listeners. What I find particularly useful is to take a deep breath, listen to your body and wear a smile. You'll make the interviewer feel special and demonstrate that you valued their question.
- Adam: Any more tips?
- Kristi: Be thankful.
- Adam: Could you clarify that?
- Kristi: What I've learned from my research is that one should thank everyone promptly. What you could do is send a thank-you e-mail after the interview.
- Adam: These are great tips, Kristi! I'm sure I'll do better on my next interview.

Learning Points

What Clauses

When you use a what, that, or who clause as the subject of a sentence, you have shifted the emphasis away from the words that sit in the subject position.

Look at these examples:

Original Sentence

You want to impress them and look more confident.

Noun Clause Sentence

What you want is to impress them and look more confident.*

We call the first part of the sentence a phrase. If it is removed, the structure no longer makes sense:

~~What~~ you could do is send a thank-you e-mail after the interview.

~~What~~ I find particularly useful is to take a deep breath, listen to your body and wear a smile

This is how we form "What" clauses.

subject / What-phrase	be	complement
What I'm suggesting	is	to find a sitting position that suits you.
What I usually do	is	sit straight and maybe lean forward a bit.
What I've learned from my research	is	one should thank everyone promptly.

Asking for Extension

Communication is a two-way street. It involves a lot of back and forth. Therefore, it is important to communicate when something is not clear to you or when you need more from the other speaker.

Asking for an extension is important in many situations especially when the message being communicated is difficult or new in some way. Here are some ways you can ask for an extension.

Examples:

- Could you expand on that?
- Could you elaborate on that?
- Uh, could you shed some light on this?
- Could you be more specific?
- Could you clarify that?
